

My understanding of Information Literacy

Dianne
McKenzie
1 May 2010

Information literacy is the ability to identify what one wants to learn about, then to go through a process of finding, sorting, evaluating, trialling, pondering, comparing, communicating and presenting the information which has been gained through a variety of experiences. Information is transformed into knowledge and understanding through this process.

This transformation can take place over a short period of time (seconds or minutes) and can be life lasting as one continues to be exposed to information. It can be a conscious or subconscious process.

Information literacy is the basis of all learning.

The process of transforming information into knowledge and understanding is the same no matter what you are learning.

Literacy ... involves a continuum of learning in enabling individuals to achieve their goals, to develop their knowledge and potential, and to participate fully in their community and wider society." UNESCO